

German Labor and Employment Law

The German Labor and Employment Law system is not codified in a special labor code, but can be found in various laws, including the German constitution (Grundgesetz), regulations and collective bargaining agreements between employers, employers' associations, and unions.

March 2019, Dr. Jan Tibor Lelley

German Labor and Employment Law generally is intended to protect the employee.

As a consequence, human resources directors and executives need practical solutions to comply with the ever-changing legal framework Germany has created for its work force.
